Give globally without taking on the risk

Benevity due diligence, risk mitigation and money movement handles the compliance issues so you don't have to.

The world is becoming more connected every day, and the causes your people care about span across borders and currencies. Before a donation reaches a nonprofit, it crosses sanctions lists, tax rules and local banking systems. The Benevity Enterprise Impact Platform carries that operational load, so you can focus on creating a purpose program that motivates action.

55%

of companies report increased scrutiny of their purpose programs, and two-thirds of large firms name legal and compliance as the primary source

Four places where risk hides

Most exposure in corporate giving sits below the donate button, where impact leaders rarely have time to look. Here is where it shows up, how Benevity handles it and why it reaches the boardroom.

The problem	How Benevity solves it	Why it matter to the business
Cross-border giving runs through intermediaries. Global payroll and matching dollars must clear local banks, sanctions checks and currency conversion. Many providers hand this to third parties, which can add 60 days or more.	Disbursements to 150+ countries in 100+ currencies through the foundations Benevity works with, with no third parties. Anti-money laundering checks apply to every donation type, and NGOsource Equivalency Determination supports cross-border grants.	Fewer vendors in your compliance chain means fewer places for data, dollars or accountability to slip.
Global reach isn't local giving. Some providers decide whether a donation is international based on the employer's paying entity. Local giving can be routed as a cross-border donation if the employer has no local entity.	Through the foundations Benevity works with in nine countries, employees can give locally and receive tax documentation where available, without the employer setting up a legal entity in each country.	Employees keep access to the tax benefits their own country offers. The company avoids unnecessary cross-border fees.
Records don't survive an audit. Hundreds of separate payments, scattered tax receipts and an audit trail built from emails and PDFs.	Consolidated donation reports on a predictable cycle. With the Global DAF offering, companies receive one USD tax receipt and monthly consolidated reports across currencies.	Finance and legal teams get one centralized, audit-ready record.

What each leader needs to hear

Every deal has the same people at the table. Each one is asking a version of the same question: is this the safe choice?

LEGAL, COMPLIANCE & RISK

Could our giving reach an organization we'd regret funding?

Benevity manages nonprofit due diligence, daily sanctions screening and a dedicated legal and regulatory team watching what's changing in the markets you operate in.

FINANCE

Can we account for every dollar, in every currency?

Benevity provides consolidated donation reports, a 99% payment success rate and, with the Global DAF offering, one USD tax receipt. Employees can also receive tax documentation in their own countries, where available.

ECONOMIC BUYER

Will it hold up when speed matters most?

Benevity global money movement means your donations get distributed to 150+ countries in as little as 14 days, with built-in compliance to absorb the risk.

PROCUREMENT

Are we adding risk to our vendor stack?

The Benevity Enterprise Impact Platform can replace up to five separate vendors, with no third-party payment partners in the disbursement chain.

Questions to ask your provider

The answers show how much risk your company is still carrying on its own.

1. Are nonprofits screened against sanctions lists every day, or only when they join?
2. Are cross-border donations handled by the provider, or passed to third-party intermediaries?
3. Do anti-money laundering checks apply to every donation type, including payroll?
4. Can you produce one audit-ready record across every country and currency?
5. Which independent security certifications back the platform?

See how the Benevity Enterprise Impact Platform can take on the operational risk of your global giving program.
